

Once a word is written, it goes rolling about, comes indifferently among those who understand it and those whom it nowise concerns, and is unaware to whom it should address itself and to whom it should not do so.

Socrates (ca. 470-399 B.C.E.)