ABRAHAM LINCOLN
(1809-1865)

Born in obscurity and poverty, with health and a good disposition as a heritage from nature, and with good parents as teachers and guides, Abraham Lincoln—sixteenth president of the United States—entered upon life's journey through toil and vicissitude to fame and immortality.

Abraham Lincoln, grandfather of the president, was born in Union, Pennsylvania, and in 1759 removed with his parents to a point near Harrisonburg, Virginia. John Hanks and Squire Boone, father of Daniel Boone, were neighbors of the Lincolns at Union. The former took up his residence at Harrisonburg, Virginia, and Squire Boone removed to Holman's Ford, on the Yadkin River, in North Carolina.

When he was twenty-one years old, the elder Abraham Lincoln went to North Carolina to visit his old neighbors, the Boones, and while there met and married Mary Shipley. He built a log cabin on the banks of the Yadkin and lived there several years. Here it was that Thomas Lincoln, father of the president, was born. Shortly after Thomas’ birth his parents, in 1778, removed to Kentucky and settled near Elizabethtown, in Hardin County. In 1784, when Thomas was but six years old, his father was killed by the Indians. There were no schools in that neighborhood, and Thomas Lincoln grew to manhood without receiving an education.

2. Who was the father of the 16th president of the United States?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

Joseph Hanks, son of John Hanks, removed to Kentucky about the time that Abraham Lincoln moved there from North Carolina. His daughter, Nancy Hanks, who was born and educated in Virginia, grew up a playmate of Thomas Lincoln, and in 1806 became his wife. Thomas Lincoln selected a farm near Hodgenville, now the county seat of Larue County, Kentucky. Thomas built a log cabin containing but one room, in which, on February 12, 1809, Abraham Lincoln, the future president, was born.

3. Who was the mother of the 16th president of the United States?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

A poor farmer, with no education and no capital other than his labor, Thomas Lincoln found little to encourage his stay in Kentucky. The institution of slavery, which lived on the harshly forced toil of the black man, threw a dark shadow across the path of the "poor white" who could claim no title to property in human flesh and sinew.

In 1817, Thomas Lincoln removed from Kentucky to Spencer County, Indiana, and settled in the forest at Pigeon Creek, near the town of Gentryville.

On October 5, 1818, Mrs. Lincoln died and was laid to rest at the foot of a tree on the farm which her husband had hewed out of the forest with his axe.

4. The institution of slavery was most cruel to those whom it enslaved. How did poor whites also suffer from the institution of slavery, an institution that provided human labor at the lowest possible cost?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

Eighteen months after the death of his wife, Mr. Lincoln married Mrs. Sarah Bush Johnston, a widow who had been a neighbor of his in Kentucky. To his stepmother Abraham became very much attached, and he always entertained the greatest respect and affection for her. Young Abraham Lincoln’s education was very simple, his school days few, and his books fewer still. Before leaving Kentucky he learned to read while listening to his mother as she gave lessons to his father.

In 1814, a Catholic priest, Zachariah Riney, who traveled through the country, opened a school in an untenanted cabin at Hodgensville, and for a few weeks gave instructions to the youth of the neighborhood. Abraham attended this school during its brief existence. In 1822, Azel Dorsey was employed as teacher at Pigeon Creek, Indiana, and during his short stay, Abraham Lincoln was his most attentive pupil. Two years after, Abraham went to school for several months, and in 1824 his school days came to an end. His time at school did not exceed twelve months altogether. In the meantime he had read Defoe's Robinson Crusoe, Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Æsop's Fables, The Bible, and Weems's Life of Washington.
Abraham Lincoln

5. How much time did Abraham Lincoln spend receiving formal schooling?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

In 1824, Abraham's father, in need of his assistance as a breadwinner, began to instruct him in the carpenter trade. In 1825, Abraham was employed at $6.00 a month to manage a ferry across the Ohio River at Gentry's Landing, near the mouth of Anderson Creek. His wages were paid to his father. The first money he earned for himself came in the shape of two half-dollars paid to him by two gentlemen whose trunks he transferred from the shore to a passing steamer. In 1828, Mr. Gentry engaged Abraham to go to New Orleans on a flat-boat with a load of produce.

In 1830, John Hanks, who had removed from Kentucky to Illinois, wrote to Thomas Lincoln, urging him to move to that State. Acting on the advice, Mr. Lincoln removed to Illinois and settled at a point some ten miles west of Decatur. Abraham Lincoln drove the ox team which hauled the household effects of the family. Wearing a coon-skin cap, jean jacket, and a pair of buckskin trousers, Abraham entered the state poor, friendless, and unknown. Thirty years later, Abraham left Illinois the foremost man in the nation, and known to all the world.

6. Who encouraged the Lincolns to move to Illinois?

________________________________________________________________________

________________________________________________________________________

Abraham assisted his father in clearing fifteen acres of land, and split the rails with which to build the fence. Although of age, he had no money. Having but a scant supply of clothing, Abraham made a bargain with Nancy Miller to make him a pair of trousers.
For each yard of cloth required he split four hundred fence-rails. As he was over six feet in height, it took fourteen hundred rails to pay for his trousers.

On April 19, 1831, Abraham went to New Orleans with a flat-boat load of pigs, corn, pork, and beef. The pigs refusing to walk, Lincoln carried them aboard in his arms. John Hanks and Lincoln's half-brother, John Johnston, accompanied him on the trip. While in New Orleans, Abraham first saw men and women sold as slaves, and as every instinct of his nature revolted at the spectacle, he said to John Hanks: "If ever I get a chance to hit that institution, I'll hit it hard."

7. Abraham Lincoln expressed opposition to ____ during a 1831 trip to New Orleans, Louisiana.
   a. capitalism
   b. politics
   c. sailing
   d. slavery

Returning from New Orleans, Abraham went to New Salem to clerk in the store of Denton Offut. While waiting for a shipment of goods, he acted as clerk on a local election board, and thus filled his first political position.

During his stay in New Salem, Abraham was frequently called on to exercise his great strength in quelling disturbances, and inspired the turbulent element of the place with a wholesome respect for his powers of muscular persuasion. He was not quarrelsome, and never engaged in contention, but never hesitated to take his own part or that of another who might need a helping hand.

He subscribed to the Louisville Journal, and generously read its contents aloud to those who gathered in the store.

During the Black Hawk War (1832), Abraham enlisted as private in a company which was raised in the neighborhood, and was at once elected captain. In a short time the company was mustered out, and he reenlisted in an "Independent Spy Battalion" which continued in service until the end of the war.

8. Abraham Lincoln served in what war?

On returning to New Salem, he announced himself an independent candidate for the Legislature. At a meeting held during the canvass, he made his first political speech in these words: "Fellow-citizens: I presume you know who I am. I am humble Abraham Lincoln. I have been solicited by many friends to become a candidate for the Legislature. My politics can be briefly stated. I am in favor of the internal improvement system, and a high protective tariff. These are my sentiments and political principles. If elected, I shall be thankful. If not, it will be all the same."

9. How might you react to this speech from Abraham Lincoln?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

In the winter of 1832, Abraham became a partner of a man named Berry, in the purchase and management of a store. They had no money, but gave their notes. Berry became dissipated, lost interest in the business, and the firm failed.

In 1833, President Jackson appointed Lincoln postmaster of New Salem; he remained postmaster until 1836. While holding the office, Lincoln voluntarily established the "free delivery" system in New Salem by carrying the letters around in his hat.

Lincoln began the study of law, and was soon after appointed deputy surveyor. The note he gave on going into partnership with Berry had been sold to a man who wanted his money, and in the fall of 1834, the sheriff levied on and sold his instruments to satisfy the debt. In that year, Lincoln was elected to the Legislature, and borrowed the money with which to purchase a suit of clothes to go to the State capital at Vandalia.

10. What was the capital city of Illinois at this time?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

Lincoln was re-elected to the Legislature in 1836, and during the canvass declared his principles as follows:

"I go for all sharing the privileges of the government who assist in bearing its burdens; consequently, I go for admitting all whites to the right of suffrage who pay taxes or bear arms, by no means excluding females."

A few years later, when questioned concerning that utterance, he said:
"All questions of social and moral reform find lodgment first with enlightened souls, who stamp them with their approval. In God's own time they will be organized into law, and thus woven into the fabric of our institutions."

11. Imagine that you are a white male voter hearing Abraham Lincoln advocate suffrage for women in 1836. How might you react?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

In 1836, Abraham met Stephen A. Douglas for the first time, at the state capital. In 1837, Abraham was admitted to the bar, in 1838 reelected to the Legislature, and again in 1840. The capital had been removed from Vandalia to Springfield, and in partnership with John T. Stuart, Abraham began the practice of law in that city in 1839. On November 4, 1842, he was married to Mary Todd, daughter of Hon. Robert S. Todd.

12. Abraham Lincoln married whom?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

In the presidential campaigns of 1840 and 1844, Abraham canvassed the State as a presidential elector on the Whig ticket; and in both campaigns was pitted, in joint debate, against Stephen A. Douglas. In 1846, Abraham was elected to the thirtieth Congress, and was the only Whig representative in that body from Illinois. On January 12, 1848, he made his first speech in Congress, on a resolution which he offered calling on the president to provide a statement relating to the war with Mexico. On January 16, 1849, he introduced a bill to abolish slavery in the District of Columbia and to compensate the owners of the liberated slaves.

13. Abraham Lincoln was a member of what political party during the 1840s?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
Abraham Lincoln

Abraham declined a re-election to Congress, and in 1849 was an unsuccessful candidate for United States senator. In 1850, he refused to accept the appointment as Governor of Oregon, tendered him by President Fillmore. For a few years he gave no attention to political matters, but the introduction in Congress of the bill to admit Nebraska and Kansas to the Union, and the agitation for the repeal of the Missouri Compromise, aroused his interest, and in a short time he became the leader of a new party in the state.

All who opposed the repeal of that compromise, of whatever party, were known as "Anti-Nebraska" in the beginning, but gradually they began to call themselves "Republicans," and as such they carried most of the "Free State" elections of 1854. Senator Douglas, in defending his course on the Nebraska Bill, made speeches through Illinois. On October 1, 1854, Lincoln, in reply to one of these speeches, in speaking of slavery said:

"I hate it because it deprives our republican example of its just influence in the world; it enables the enemies of free institutions to taunt us as hypocrites; causes the real friends of freedom to doubt our sincerity; is at war with the vital principles of civic liberty; contrary to the Declaration of Independence; and maintains that there is no right principle of action but self-interest.... No man is good enough to govern another man without the other's consent.... I object to the Nebraska Bill because it assumes there can be moral right in the enslaving of one man by another."

14. What was the name of Lincoln's new political party?

___________________________________

___________________________________

Lincoln was a candidate for United States Senator in 1855, but his withdrawal from the contest gave the election to Mr. Trumbull. In 1856, he received one hundred and ten votes for vice-president at the first Republican national convention, and canvassed the State as one of the presidential electors. During this canvass he said:

"Sometimes when I am speaking I feel that the time is soon coming when the sun shall shine and the rain fall on no man who shall go forth to unrequited toil.... How it will come about, when it will come, I cannot tell; but that time will surely come."

The Supreme Court of the United States, on March 6, 1857, committed itself to the perpetuation of slavery in the Dred Scott decision. That act, together with the question of admitting Kansas to the Union as a slave or free state, furnished the argument for the legislative campaign.
of 1858, in which Lincoln was a candidate for United States senator against Stephen A. Douglas.

15. What 1857 Supreme Court decision held that a slave was not a citizen, and therefore not entitled to sue in federal court?

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

In Lincoln’s speech accepting the nomination he, in referring to the agitation for the abolition of slavery, said:

"In my opinion it will not cease until a crisis shall have been reached and passed. 'A house divided against itself cannot stand.' I believe this Government cannot endure permanently half slave and half free. I do not expect the Union to be dissolved, I do not expect the house to fall, but I do expect it will cease to be divided."

On May 16, 1860, the second Republican national convention met in Chicago, and on the third ballot nominated Lincoln for the presidency over William H. Seward, who was at that time the idol of the radical element of the party. Not many who listened to the clergyman who delivered the prayer at the opening of the convention, gave serious thought to these prophetic words as they fell from his lips:

"We entreat Thee that at some future, but no distant, day the evil which now invests the body politic shall not only have been arrested in its progress, but wholly eradicated from the system."

The Northern Democrats nominated Stephen A. Douglas; the slave-holding, Southern Democrats nominated John C. Breckenridge, and a Constitutional Union party nominated John Bell. The Electoral College gave Lincoln 180 votes, Breckenridge 72, Bell 39, and Douglas 12.

16. Name the four presidential candidates in the 1860 election.

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________

In his inaugural address Lincoln said:

"I have no purpose, directly or indirectly, to interfere with the institution of slavery in the states where it exists. I believe I have no lawful right to do so, and I have no inclination to do so."

Although his inaugural breathed peace and conciliation in every line, it had no effect on the hot-headed advocates of secession. The Civil War began with the bombardment of Fort Sumter on April 12, 1861, and ended with Lincoln’s death. On April 15th, Lincoln issued his first call for troops, and during his administration the total number called for was 2,759,049.

17. When did the U.S. Civil War begin?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

With the exception of Russia, the foreign powers exhibited evidences of hostility to the Union. When urged to retaliation, Lincoln said: "One war at a time, if you please, gentlemen."

On May 20, 1862, Lincoln signed the Homestead Law, a boon of inestimable value to settlers on land. On January 1, 1863, he issued the Emancipation Proclamation, freeing slaves in all rebelling states, which stamped the seal of eternal truth on the Declaration of Independence. On November 19, 1863, at the dedication of the Gettysburg Cemetery, Lincoln, in concluding a speech which should be committed to memory by every citizen of the nation, said:

"It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us.... That we here highly resolve that the dead shall not have died in vain; that the nation shall, under God, have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

18. What document freed the slaves living in those states which had seceded from the Union?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

On June 8, 1864, Lincoln was re-nominated by the Republican national convention, and General McClellan was nominated by the Democrats. At the election, Lincoln received 212 of the 233 electoral votes cast. In concluding his inaugural address, March 4, 1865, he said:

"Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes His aid against the other. It may seem strange that any men should dare to ask God's assistance in wringing their bread from the sweat of other men's faces: but let us judge not, that we be not judged.... Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsman's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so, still, it must be said, that the judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether. With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us finish the work we are in, to bind up the nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle, and for his widow and his orphans, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and a lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations."

On the evening of April 14, 1865, while seated in a box at Ford's Theatre, witnessing the play, "Our American Cousin," Lincoln was shot by an actor, John Wilkes Booth. At twenty-two minutes past seven on the morning of the 15th, his life ended.

19. Who assassinated Abraham Lincoln?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

Lincoln's body was embalmed and taken, in funeral procession, from Washington through Baltimore, Harrisburg, Philadelphia, New York, Albany, Buffalo, Cleveland, and Chicago to Springfield, and was buried on May 4th at Oak Ridge Cemetery. On October 15, 1874, his remains were taken up and placed in a tomb beneath a magnificent and elegantly designed monument consisting of a statue of the martyred president and an obelisk of imposing appearance.

20. Where is Abraham Lincoln buried?
___________________________________
___________________________________
___________________________________

No pen can do justice to the character of Lincoln, for the world will never know of the trials, embarrassments, and misgivings which beset him from his infancy in the backwoods to his tomb in Springfield. During his administration, he never knew a moment free from anxiety. Each day he faced a new problem, and finding no precedent to guide him in its solution, he acted in accordance with his own good common sense, and proved equal to every emergency. Frequently misunderstood by the nation and its foremost citizens, Lincoln removed all doubts by the touch of the statesman when the time was ripe.

To fully estimate the statesman we must know the man. As years have gone by, the full nobility of his private character has been disclosed to the world in all its simple grandeur. His was "a spirit of the greatest size and divinest metal" which no temptation could allure from the course of right. His administration was the most trying that could fall to the lot of man, no other furnished so many opportunities to amass wealth through speculation and intrigue, but greed and avarice were strangers to his nature, and no stain rests upon his memory.

Abraham Lincoln was slow to arrive at conclusions, but when deliberation gave birth to conviction he unflaggingly strove for the right. His education was practical, not theoretical, and was acquired in the school of nature and among men rather than among books. The basis of his life was earnestness. No rhetorical display marked his speech, but his oratory fastened the attention, appealed to reason and carried conviction to the hearts of his listeners. He valued public opinion, for he said:

"With public sentiment nothing can fail; without public sentiment nothing can succeed. Consequently he who molds public sentiment goes deeper than he who enacts statutes or pronounces decisions."

Lincoln opposed the extension of slavery rather than its abolition. But as he divined the real sentiments of its advocates, he realized that enduring peace would not bless the nation while the institution lived, a menace to free labor and industrial prosperity. He professed no religion, for his great heart throbbed in sympathy with all humanity, and he would not be separated from even the humblest among men by the artificial barriers of creed. He believed in the gospel of liberty and would guarantee it to all men through constitutional enactment.

When Abraham Lincoln became president, he found slavery entrenched behind the bulwarks of constitutional law and judicial decision. He found a united South, resolute in its determination to perpetuate slavery in the nation; a vacillating North, divided in its sentiment on the great question of property in man. He found the nation in the throes of civil war, and died in the triumphal hour of his country's deliverance, with the scepter of slavery shattered, its fetters broken and in rust, and its power crumbled to ashes.

Public criticism never annoyed him, and he was not averse to taking counsel from the poorest among men. It was love of country, not selfish ambition, which turned his attention to public life. Toward the end of his administration, he was rewarded by public confidence and a respect for his honesty and singleness of aim toward the good of the nation. He had a great relish for story-telling and used his fund of anecdotes to good advantage in illustrating points in conversation.

Abraham Lincoln’s administration stands the guidepost of the centuries, set by eternity as the dividing line between the servitude of the past and the freedom of the future. His monument stands the altar of a nation’s fame, and his name will live to guide the world to enfranchisement.

21. What, from the life of Abraham Lincoln, would you most like to emulate in your own life? What would you like to avoid? Explain your answer.

________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
________________________________________________________________________
Vocabulary Terms: Match each term (found in the text above) to its meaning.

22. _____ a change occurring in something’s course
23. _____ act of abrogating or annulling
24. _____ act of formally withdrawing from an alliance or political union
25. _____ argumentative or contentious
26. _____ art of public speaking
27. _____ condition or state of having the right to vote
28. _____ continuous, difficult, and exhausting work
29. _____ decision that serves as a guide for future decisions
30. _____ desire to inflict suffering on another, done with evil or mean intent
31. _____ dissolute or intemperate
32. _____ distress of mind caused by fear
33. _____ extinguishing or suppressing
34. _____ four-sided, tapering stone shaft, usually in the form of a monument
35. _____ hesitating or indecisive
36. _____ not reciprocated or returned
37. _____ person who earns a living
38. _____ ramparts
39. _____ solicit
40. _____ unending life
41. _____ without giving way

(a) abolition  (k) oratory
(b) anxiety    (l) precedent
(c) breadwinner (m) quarrelsome
(d) bulwarks    (n) quelling
(e) canvass     (o) secession
(f) dissipated  (p) toil
(g) enfranchisement (q) unfalteringly
(h) immortality (r) unrequited
(i) malice      (s) vacillating
(j) obelisk     (t) vicissitude
42. Using a Graphic Organizer: Complete this partial family tree of Abraham Lincoln.

Artistic Expression: Illustrate a scene from the life of Abraham Lincoln.
Abraham Lincoln

Word Search Puzzle

Abraham Lincoln
army
Booth
Civil War
emancipation
Gettysburg
Illinois
Kentucky
lawyer
Mary Todd military
President
Republican Party
secede slavery
Sumter
Union